

CARAM Asia Task Force on Migrant Workers Rights

Strategic Plan 2021 TO 2024

The Migrant Workers Rights Programme seeks to address the absence of legal protection, rights to redress and access to justice for migrant workers. The abuse, exploitation and discrimination faced by migrant workers are compounded by the fact that migrant workers are often viewed as temporary cheap commodity to meet the destination countries' production and domestic needs. The situation is made worse with the rising costs of migration that force many poor workers to migrate through unofficial channels resulting in them becoming undocumented migrant workers. Some exploitative employers refuse to renew work permits and pay wages, majority of employers keep passports and/or traveling documents in their own custody which force migrant workers to become undocumented too. However, CARAM Asia views the lack of documentation as an administrative issue which should not deny undocumented migrant worker's human rights. Through advocacy with various stakeholders, CARAM Asia has been consistently lobbying for comprehensive legal protection measures be made available for all migrant workers regardless of their immigration status.

The Foreign Domestic Workers (FDW) program of CARAM Asia area focuses on the recognition of domestic work as an economic activity and to have it included under national employment act or labour laws in both origin and destination countries. Key activities include advocacy, utilizing appropriate international instruments (SDG, Domestic Workers Convention 189, Core labour standards of ILO, CEDAW Convention Recommendation NO. 26, and Migrant Workers Convention) public campaigns and awareness programmes. Building regional cooperation with other networks, trade unions and organizations to strengthen the response towards protecting and promoting labour and health rights of foreign domestic workers. CARAM Asia has initiated the formation of the United for Foreign Domestic Workers Rights (UFDWRs), a coalition of regional and international groups to advocate for foreign domestic workers' rights. Due to lack of recognition and protection under labour laws, foreign domestic workers experience rights violation as well as violence, abuse and exploitation by employers, recruiting agents and other involved actors. The FDWs stay at employer's houses in isolation without any social protection and freedom to mobility which put them at risk of sexual and physical violence. CARAM Asia addresses this issue and provide legal services to the survivors of violence under this task force.
